Facial Recognition Software

Software examines an image identifies facial structures to establish the presence of a face.

The face is measured by certain nodal points and facial features, this data is used to create a "faceprint." (similar to a fingerprint)

The faceprint is then compared to a database of other faceprints to identify who the face belongs to.